Third ward—J. TRUMAN SWAGER.

Fourth ward—MARK HARKNESS.

Fifth ward—LUCIUS HOGE, Jr.

An Evening Echo.
A willing mind makes a hard journey easy.—MESSENGER.

Yelping as it is, something evidently fit the Exponent, too, as well as the bunch of fellows it supports one day and asks to resign from the ticket the next day.

The gang pushed Leggett into the race and the gang's hand organ is now trying to push him out. Perhaps, the man the gang got cold feet about on the eve of the convention suits the hand organ better, but it is too late now to patch up the ticket.

Perry Clark says there was just one thing lacking at the Charley Jones social stunt. When Perry was asked what that was, he replied: "The Colonel from Virginia, sah, was absent." Perry said he did not know whether the gentleman had gone back to Culpepper or not.

A Clever Chief.
The Clarksburg Exponent has been a constant admirer of the work done by Harry L. Brooks in his capacity as chief of police. The Democratic organ has repeatedly praised him for his promptness and cleverness.

Only recently when a robbery was committed in the large storage house owned and operated by the present candidate for mayor on the Democratic ticket, the Exponent said that "a very clever piece of work was done yesterday afternoon by Chief of Police Harry L. Brooks, assisted by City Officer U. G. Shope, who within three hours after being called, had Jim Mills, a colored employee, under arrest, and landed in jail and a portion of the stolen meat was located." In many other instances have the promptness, cleverness and diligence of the chief been commended in these same terms by the Exponent.

Having a unanimous indorsement of his splendid work, therefore, Mr.

Brooks ought to have a complete walk over at the city election.

Lemons.

The value of the lemon as a promoter of health has been more and more appreciated as the years have gone by and the public has become better informed on the subject, but the chief difficulty is that it is exactly in the summer months, when the lemon is most to be desired, that it is the rarest and highest priced. The government has taken hold of the matter, however, and the result is that successful experiments have just been completed by the Department of Agriculture for supplying the country with lemons during the summer months, when the demand is heaviest and the supply has heretofore been lightest. The process consists in forcing the coloring of the fruit. It has been discovered by experts of the pomological bureau that by subjecting the green lemons to a heating process for an hour a day for three or four days the coloring process takes place and the fruit is ready for market. A Washington dispatch states that lemon growers are now using the new process and the department experts think that there will be plenty of lemons for cool drinks next summer.

"Barlow" and "Goat."

Hopefully trying to find a plausible reason why the city clerkship should pass from experienced hands into those of one who does not have the slightest conception of that important work, the local exponent of Democracy erroneously asserts that Will H. Cole is not identified with business.

Mr. Cole not only knew all about the printing business before his adverse critic wandered in from where they build churches out of gourds but followed that trade several years and conducted a very creditable business in that line. He is associated with Charles S. Warner and Lyle A. Smith, reputable business men, in one of Clarksburg's leading undertaking businesses, and has other business interests.

Will his carping critic please tell the public what prominent or small business undertaking Mr. Cole's opponent for city clerk has been in or is identified with? For the edification of Clarksburg voters, that critic might also point out in detail when and where Mr. Holden earned his living by the sweat of his brow, except by feeding at the public crib. "Barlow" as all know Mr. Cole outclasses "Goat" Holden when it comes to the question of business interests and hard work. He also puts him out of commission in the matter of experience in keeping the records of the city, and there is no good reason why a raw recruit should be run in.

Mr. Holden is very nicely and comfortably situated in the office of the county clerk and he will doubtless find his berth retained there for him after the city election.

Letting the People Rule.

The slogan, "Let the people rule," which Colonel Roosevelt has tried to purloin for his personal use, is not an innovation in national politics. In fact, it is one of the original corner stones of the Republican platform, set by Abraham Lincoln and his contemporaries, and it has remained in Republican national platforms ever since. In the last Republican national platform, in contrasting Republican and Democratic policies, it was stated that Democracy ultimately would have the nation own the people, while Republicanism would have the people own the nation. The theory of a majority rule has been firmly entrenched in Republican policies ever since the party was born. Indeed, the party could not have lived without it. Likewise it is a cardinal Republican policy that equal rights should be extended to all.

Mr. Bryan attempted to steal the slogan for his presidential races, but it did not take the people long to discover that the plagiaristic pose did not commend the Bryan theories to them with any greater force than that which previously obtained. The people used the rule on Mr. Bryan and ruled him out of order.

Of necessity, all political candidates must declare for a rule of the people and doubtless men of all parties believe their political tenets are the most conducive to this end; hence, any effort to assume the exclusive possession and application of the term is to fall into platitudinous demagogy. It is not keeping with his old doctrine of fair play when Mr. Roosevelt declares that he believes in a rule of the people and that his Republican opponents do not.

ROOSEVELT AGAINST DIRECT SELECTION

In commenting upon this subject, the Springfield Republican says: "President Taft was well justified in pointing out that in so far as this cry, in Mr. Roosevelt's mouth, signifies that hitherto the people have not ruled, it is an unfair reflection upon the government of our fathers and a falsehood in the ears of the present generation."

With all its limitations and faults, constitutional government in America has not failed to let the people rule through lawful majorities. That it may be proved and made more responsive to public needs in the future no one denies, but its essential soundness as a government of law, working under a written constitution for the greatest good of the greatest number, is a fact that no American with the least pride in his country's history and marvelous growth should hesitate one moment to affirm.

Of Candidates as Shown by His Opposition to a Primary Law.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 23.—Commenting upon the presidential situation, John L. Southwick, editor of the Free Press, of Burlington, Vt., says:

"It is highly significant that the very faction that professes to rely upon the presidential primary for the promotion of its cause should be the first to charge that the will of the rank and file of the party in North Dakota had been defeated by Democrats voting in the presidential primaries for LaFollette, the betrayed ultra progressive leader. Theodore Roosevelt is the last man who should raise the question of good faith of President Taft, in relation to direct nominations by the people, wherever the same can be safeguarded by law."

"If Mr. Roosevelt had co-operated with Governor Hughes to secure genuine direct nominations by the people, instead of using the very federal patronage and the steamroller he is now deploring to prevent Governor Hughes from working out the political primary problem at Albany, he would not now be including New York among the states in which he claims the great problem can be solved in a few weeks."

"One has only to turn to the presidential primary so-called in Lamolite county, which has been so widely exploited in Oyster Bay despatches as indicating that Vermont was a slave for Roosevelt, to find how presidential sentiment is being manufactured. The Roosevelt editor who conducted this presidential primary declared in his own paper, that the county is now for Roosevelt, but that the county would have been for Hughes, if ballots for him had been provided."

"As a matter of fact the few farmers, who opposed Taft on account of reciprocity before they saw Canadian farmers reject the proposition would prefer Hughes to Roosevelt, but many of the grangers and other farmers are following ex-Governor Bacheider, of New Hampshire, who as president of the Granite State Taft organization introduced the president at Concord."

"Here, as in the past, the Republican party is the party of moral ideas, and the great mass of our substantial and thinking Republicans recognize President Taft as the champion and leader of to-day's genuinely progressive yet sane and safe republicanism."
